

From the outgoing Secretary,

OOTA is now known as OKOTA to distinguish us from other states beginning with the letter "O". This decision by the Executive Board is a symbol of the uniqueness of our state organization and the professionals it represents. Who else would be drawing such nationally recognized speakers as Taylor and Kielhoffner for the upcoming Annual Conference, impacting recent state legislation to protect infringement on our right to practice Occupational Therapy, and updating the on-line format of our organization? I am proud to have served this organization as secretary these past four years and look forward to continue working among its members in the future. I highly recommend an active role in OKOTA to open your eyes to possibilities, opportunities, and realities in the ever changing field of Occupational Therapy.
